

College Readiness for Adults: Beyond Academic Preparation!

Course Dates: April 22–June 9, 2010

Course Description

The overall objective of this course is to assist educators, counselors, administrators and postsecondary partners to better prepare their students for postsecondary education. Together, we will identify, organize, and reflect on the broad array of readiness skills and abilities that adults need to be successful in postsecondary education and training. Then, each of us will consider how to change our practice to incorporate what we have learned. The course was developed and written by Cynthia Zafft, Principal Investigator for the National College Transition Network, World Education.

Objectives

Upon completion of this course you will be able to:

- summarize the findings of a small body of research related to adult readiness for college
- identify, organize, reflect on and share your current thinking on the process of assessing learners for college readiness
- apply a four-part model of adult readiness
- identify, organize, share, and reflect on the process of assessing learners for college readiness
- choose at least two activities/assessments to use with your students to improve their readiness for college
